- Note: See [RN2651: 12]: "This part of Enkidu's speech probably employs an adage or a proverb. Curiously, biblical law attests to a similar dictum, but looks at the same thematic components from a different – moral, not practical – point of view. Deut 22: 6 reads (JPS trans.): "If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, in any tree or on the ground, with young ones or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young, or upon the eggs, thou shalt not take the dam with the young." (I am indebted to Dr. A. Gai who turned my attention to this parallel.)"

With Lambert I understand the phrase libbam epēšum to mean ‘give encouragement’ (cf. his translation of ll. 19'–23' in [RN425: 42]), comparable with the well-known idiom libbam šakānum, ‘to hearten, encourage, comfort’. However, the late version, though badly damaged at this point, gives Enkidu a more physical role and expands the line to include the lungs (SB V 265): En[kīdu libba? il]putu adi ḫašê ištalpu.”

- Note: See [RN117: 265–266]: “The reading harharam here and in l. 34' was discovered by A. Westenholz (see AHw, p. 1559). It has usually been translated ‘scoundrel’, ‘villain’ or similar (von Soden: ‘Schurke’; Bottéro: ‘scélérat’; Pettinato: ‘brigante’; Tournay and Shaffer: ‘vaurien’). The image of Huwawa as some kind of worthless rogue is not one that accords with what the epic tells us elsewhere. He is evil of aspect and an enemy of mankind, but guarding the cedar is his destined task and not a matter of villainy. In connected context the word ḫarḫaru is otherwise known only from the Theodicy, where it refers to some rascal undeserving of promotion (l. 77; cf. also l. 221). The translation ‘scoundrel’ is derived from the late synonym list Malku VIII 125–6 (STT 394) and the commentary on the Theodicy (see [RN432: 76 and 83]). In both harharu is associated with various rogues and social misfits: ishappu, guzallu, šērum (or terrum) and kuluʾu. Given what we know of Ḫuwawa, my suspicion is that harharu acquired the moral overtone of lawless behaviour as a late, secondary development and earlier meant simply something like ‘monster’, ‘freak’. Huwawa’s appearance was nothing if not monstrous.”

- Note: See [RN117: 266]: “Saria is the OB form of SB Sirara or Siraya, the Babylonian version of biblical and Ugaritic Mt Sirion (or Sarôn), which traditionally forms a pair with Mt Lebanon (see, e.g., [RN115: 217–18]; [temp_id_705850616004126: 119]). In recently published texts from Mari the two mountain ranges occur together as Sarian (sometimes contracted to Sarên) and Labnan (see [temp_id_2177152396606734: 88]). The present line attests to a tradition in which the high ridges either side of the Levantine Rift Valley were riven apart by Ḫuwawa’s terrible yell. In the later text the rift is created instead during Gilgameš’s wrestle with Ḫumbaba (SB V 133–4).”

- Note: See [RN117: 266]: “(…) The alternative to the ‘sandhi’ writing proposed by Bauer (= puzzuram ipte), is to read pu-sú-um-mi ip-te, ‘he opened the veils’ ([parpola_standard_1997: 238]; cf. already Pettinato, Tournay and Shaffer, Westenholz). The objections to this analysis are that (a) pusummum seems to be only a garment, not a curtain of the kind used in temples (which is šiddum), and (b) with no preposition before mūšab ilī, ipte would be forced to govern two objects. In either analysis the image is of the violation of the most sacred part of a sanctuary, which is normally hidden from human gaze. The tradition in which the mountain of the Cedar Forest is the home of the gods is not native to Babylonia; see Chapter 10, the introduction to SB V.”

- Note: See [RN117: 266]: “I read urbazillī (Bauer: ur-ma-zi-li; see AHw s.v. urmazillu) in the light of the later text, which has hur-ba-zal-lu (…), presumably a form of the same word. The customary understanding of the last two words is that Enkidu was digging up the tree-stumps. Tree-stumps are not useful as lumber, and now that the later text has the verb ištene″â it is clear that in this line ú-ha-ra is from hiʾārum (uharra, ventive) not herûm. The II/1 stem, previously unattested for ḫiʾārum, suits the plurality of the object the verb governs. As I see it, while Gilgameš fells one tree Enkidu is busy choosing the next (cf. already Tournay and Shaffer: ‘Enkidu choisit une bille de bois rare’).”
