[o 1] Enki loves the love-charm,
[o 3] The love-charm, Ištar’s son, [sit]ting in [her?/his? l]ap,
[o 5] Turning here through the sap of the incense-tree.
[o 6] You, Oh two beautiful maidens, are blooming!
[o 8] To the garden you come down, indeed come down to the garden!
[o 10] You have drunk(?) the sap of the incense-tree.
[o 12] I have seized now your(f.) drooling mouth (lit. “mouth of sap”),
[o 13] I have seized your(f.) shining eyes,
[o 15] I have seized your(f.) urinating vulva (lit. “vulva of urine”).
[o 17] I leaped to the garden of Sîn,
[o 19] I cut the poplar tree for her day.
[r 21] Encircle(f.) me between the boxwood trees, as the shepherd encircles the flock,
[r 23] As the goat (encircles) its kid, the sheep its lamb, the mare its foal!
[r 25] His arms are adorned,
[r 26] Oil and (the sound of) harp – his lips.
[r 28] A cup of oil in his hands, a cup of cedar fragrance on his shoulders.
[r 30] The love-charms have persuaded her, driven her to ecstasy –
[r 32] Now I have seized your(f.) lustful mouth (lit. “mouth of sexual attraction”).
[r 33] I conjure you(f.) by the name of Ištar and Išḫara:
[r 35] ‘Until his neck and your(f.) neck are not entwined – you(f.) shall not find peace!’
