Abbé J.-J. Sauveplane, "Une épopée babylonienne: Is-Tu-Bar – Gilgamès" (Revue des religions 1892–1893) – French

- Author: Abbé Jules-Justin Sauveplane
- Source: French Wikisource: https://fr.wikisource.org/wiki/Une_épopée_babylonienne (index), section I.7 "Le Déluge; apothéose de Samas-napistim; ...": https://fr.wikisource.org/wiki/Une_épopée_babylonienne/I.7 (transcribed from Revue des religions, vol. 1, 1892, djvu on Wikisource).
- Retrieved: 2026-10-16
- License / copyright: Public domain (1892 publication; Wikisource hosts it as PD).

Files

- `index.raw.html`, `I.7--le-deluge.raw.html`: MediaWiki `action=render` HTML.
- `I.7--le-deluge.md`: clean text (`^[n]` = footnotes).

Line numbering

None. It is a literary paraphrase/retelling with embedded translated quotations, not a line-by-line translation.

Assessment

The only French item found, and of curiosity value only. It is an 1890s Catholic popularisation with obsolete readings (Is-Tu-Bar/Izdubar, Samas-napistim, Bel for Enlil, Ninib, Amel-Ea for Ur-šanabi). For serious French comparison, see the paid editions recorded in `../_records-only--paid-and-restricted/README.md`: J. Bottéro, L'Épopée de Gilgameš (Gallimard 1992), and R. J. Tournay & A. Shaffer (Cerf 1994). E. Dhorme, Choix de textes religieux assyro-babyloniens (Paris 1907), has transliteration + French translation of the flood text and is on archive.org (https://archive.org/details/choixdetextesrel00dhoruoft). Dhorme died in 1966, so it is still in copyright in life+70 countries until 2036 (US: PD). It was not downloaded.