- Note: [RN117: 258]: “As van Dijk also noted, [these lines are] similar to a couplet of the late version: ašar Ḫumbāba ittallaku šakin kibsu | ḫarrānātu šutēšurāma ṭubbat girru (SB V 4–5). Here it is evidently direct speech, not narrative. At the end of l. 15 there may be dittography: ša#-ki!#-in!# ki#-ib#-s[u]? The spelling šu-te-ši-ir for the regular OB stative šutēšur finds a parallel in another literary tablet from Tell Harmal, the fable of Tamarisk and Date-Palm, in which the construct state of the infinitive is likewise rendered ([RN432: 155, IM 53946, 4]: [a-n]a šu-te-ši-ir ma-tim). An orthography attested twice over is more easily seen as a reflection of local pronunciation or dialect than as a spelling mistake. As Lambert points out ([RN432: 328]), the regular infinitive šu-te-šu-ur also occurs at Tell Harmal, in a bilingual excerpt of Inninšagurra (now TIM IX 21, 9, ed. [sjoeberg1975in-nin: 188, 118]).”

- Note: [RN117: 258]: “The spelling aš-šu-ru for ašru can also be interpreted as local pronunciation. A similar expansion may happen in the OB incantation TIM IX 66, 4: aš-šu-nu-gal-lam // 65, 2: aš-nu-ga-la-am (both ed. [RN2226: 226]), where the word aš(šu)nugallum refers to a snake.”

- Note: [RN117: 258]: “The sequence i niškun kakka ina bāb Ḫuwāwa makes for a line of poetry as it stands, but the passage is so broken it is impossible to be absolutely sure that the verb and the locative phrase belong together. However, kakkam šakānum makes good sense as a suitably symbolic act. See also the OB Sargon tale from Tell Harmal (TIM IX 48), where the clause iš-ku-un ka-ki-šu (i 13'), ‘he set in place his weapons’, describes one of the things that Sargon did after taking possession of the Cedar Forest. Westenholz translates, ‘readied his weapons’ ([RN262: 82]), but a symbolic interpretation is suggested by the following clauses, i-ta-qí ni-qí-šu il-bi-in ap-pa-šu, ‘he made his sacrifices, he paid homage’. The three actions can be understood in the context as ritual acts marking Sargon’s conquest of the territory and his thanksgiving to the divine power or powers that made it possible. What Gilgameš and Enkidu intend to do is to mark their conquest of Huwawa’s domain.”

- Note: [RN117: 258]: “The phrase …-tu ša ṣērim is evidently an epithet of Enkidu, the subject of [issaqqar]am ana ibrīšu in the next line, and comparable with waldam ṣērim (l. 47). None of the synonyms for ‘offspring’ seems to fit the traces. Provisionally I assume that the signs aš-ṭú (i.e., wašṭum) are the result of a misunderstanding of waldum in the light of the phonetic development š+dental > l+dental, already well attested in OB in the noun iltānum < ištānum, ‘north wind, north’ (CAD I, p. 269, 1d1'; *GAG*³ §30g*).”

- Note: [RN117: 258]: "The verb i-ša-ḫa-am is most easily parsed as from šâʾu (i.e., išâʾam), but Adad is not an obvious subject in this regard. Perhaps the spelling is corrupt for the more suitable išaggum, 'he will thunder'."

- Note: [RN117: 258]: "Van Dijk read [inū]mi ikrubušši, 'lorsqu'il l'eut prié', and, identifying obverse and reverse differently from me, saw the context as Gilgameš's prayer to Ninsun earlier in the story (cf. SB III 23 ff.). Room for i-nu-mi is lacking, however, and the traces are also against it. The form ikrubušši is not a viable one; ikrubu-š is good hymno-epic style, leaving ŠI to be explained separately. At the end Van Dijk read ši-[pí]-šu, 'il dirigea ses pas', but the new copy casts doubt on this. My understanding is that the object of ištakan has already been expressed, as pānam(igi)."

It can be seen as diagnostic of the Diyala tradition. The phrase balāṭamma ul balṭānu is clearly an example of a paronomastic infinitive construction, but an exceptional one in this period. There are very few examples of the accusative singular of the paronomastic infinitive in OB, three being noted by [stol1976studies: 105]; this, the fourth, is the first with enclitic -ma. OB paronomastic infinitives with -ma otherwise follow the model parāsumma, which Aro and von Soden analyse as locative (see [RN776: 112–13, 4.8]; *GAG*³ §150a*). The only other example of parāsamma is very late, in Erra IV 112: na-ha-am-ma ul ta-nu-uh, ‘you found no peace at all’.”

A xii 5). In Akkadian note Mt Ḫašur as šad {giš}erēni(eren) bi-šit {giš}erēni(eren) {giš}šurmēni(šur.mìn) {giš}ši-qit-ti {giš}su-pa-li, ‘mountain of cedar, place of origin(?) of cedar, cypress, almond, supālu-juniper, etc.’ (BBR 75 obv. 6–7; SB divination prayer). The phrase šīḫūtim iṣṣī simātu ēkallim is reminiscent of the passage of the late text in which Ḫumbaba, pleading for his life, promises to reserve various kinds of timber for his conqueror (SB V 154–5): luṣṣurka asa […] / iṣṣī bālti ēkal[li …]. The reversing of the usual order of noun and adjective probably stresses the latter: see Chapter 9, the section on Some features of language and style.”

- Note: [RN117: 259]: “The last four words recur in OB IM 19 and can be identified as a stock line. The phrase waldam ṣērim can be added to the list of phrases that use this construction, as studied by [reiner1984damqam: 175–82 (Type 3)]. This line is an older version of the line and a half which conclude at least two dream episodes in SB IV (26–7: [š]a iʾʾaldamma ina ṣ[ēri mitluka ileʾʾī] / [iza]kkara ana ibrīšu, 107: [taʾʾald]amma ina ṣēri mitluka nileʾʾ[ī]). Another variant occurs in OB Harmal$_2$ 18–19.”
