- Note: See [RN117: 833]: “The proposed restoration is tentative (A. Westenholz suggests [ša šalmiš], but the verb elû is very suggestive. The point is that none of the lovers of the queen of heaven ever joined her there. If I am right, the language involves an untranslatable word-play between allallu, a type of bird which also appears in l. 48 as a former object of Ištar’s desires, and the noun which is a synonym of ‘warrior’ (Malku I 27: al-lal-lu = qar-ra-du). The former meaning anticipates the story of the bird maimed by Ištar and the latter provides a human parallel with ḫāmeru in the first line of the couplet, and so introduces an implicit contrast between the capabilities of the bird and the man. The points made are thus twofold: by virtue of a broken wing, Ištar’s allallu-bird cannot fly off to the sky; and unlike an allallu-bird, an allallu-man cannot go to heaven."
