Von Soden reads ba-lat, ‘without’ (Reclam[4], p. 63; cf. AHw, p. 1546, s.v. balûtu), but this word is otherwise restricted to the Old and Neo-Assyrian dialects. Bottéro emends to obtain sense: ‘“Il n’y a pas de conscience <en> toi!” Le copiste a oublié un mot et employé, au lieu du pronom de la deuxième personne, celui de la troisième’ (p. 136 with fn. 1). Parpola reads ba-laṭ uz-ni-ša₂ (meaning?). Reading bašât uznī (sg.) Enkidu contrasts his own consciousness with the door’s obvious lack of it. At the end perhaps restore i-ba-aš₂-šu-[ki ka-a-ši].”

However, recent translators all take this word exactly so, as the singular object of the following verb. In the context it is difficult to win any other decipherment except perhaps ilīka (acc. pl.). The god of Enkidu is not so far identified explicitly, but Šamaš plays a special role in protecting the heroic pair on their adventures, pleads Enkidu's case before Anu, Enlil and Ea, and comforts him on his deathbed, so his restoration here seems very probable. The spelling lu-us-hir (MS f [HuzNA1]) is assumed to be for lusḫur (Landsberger); the use of a CVC sign with abnormal vowel is unsurprising in a tablet from Sultantepe."

MS g [BabNB1c]'s spelling of the last word of the phrase as ZI-ti₃ allows for an analysis of aq-ra-ti in both MSS as stative, i.e. aššu aqrat napištī, 'because my life is precious'. But when considered in the light of the same manuscript's ib-ri-i for ibrīya in l. 95, the spelling ZI-ti₃ might also stand for napištīya. The adjectival form aqratu instead of aqartu can be explained as elevated style: see above, Chapter 9, the section on Language and style sub (i)."

- Note: [RN117: 847]: “This line represents an addition to the text of MB Ur. Von Soden associates the hapax legomenon ta-hu-ti-ki with taḫû II (AHw, p. 1303), a rare word that refers to the young of animals and is equated with māru, ‘son’, in Explicit Malku I 192. The context here, as in MB Ur 14-15, is the prostitute’s exclusion from the respectable wifely duty of making a household and raising a family within it, and taḫûtu thus describes human young. Landsberger restored the beginning of the line as [e tu]-ram-mi-i to match the form of the other prohibitions in these curses. Though the verb rummû means ‘loosen’, it would be unwise to exclude it while the middle of the line is undeciphered. It is also possible to read the verb as [la t]a-ram-me, yielding ‘you are not to love (your family, etc.)’, but to me the point is not that the prostitute does not love her children (or have children to love), but that she cannot provide them with a respectable home.” See also [fromebllab0039: 106]: “The line is absent from the MB parallel (MB Ur 14-15) but preserved in all SB MSS. MS K.2589 (George’s MS E_1) has been read as ša₂ ta-hu-ti#-ki#. Following AHw. 1303, [RN117: 847] understands the word as related to the rare taḫû II, a word equated in Malku with māru, “son”; both AHw. and CAD T 57b understand it as a hapax taḫûtu, “kinfolk”. [RN416: 273] states that collation of the tablet revealed the word to be ta-RI-ti-ki, “presumably a form of tārītu ‘nurse’”, a reading supported by K. Simkó’s inspection of @url{/fragmentarium/K.2589}{K.2589} (NinNA4a = MS E_1) and @url{/fragmentarium/K.8590}{K.8590} (NinNA3a = MS Z_1). The correct decipherment of the line, however, escapes us.”

- Note: See [fromebllab0039: 106-107]: ““May you not sit on the young women’s chair!” Previous attempts at restoring the parallel line in the MB Ur MS (UET 6/2 394) include E_2.E$Š_3$.DAM] ([RN1419Gadd: 109]) bīt qe₂#-re#-et# ardāti ([lambert1992prostitution: 129]), and ma#-aš#-<ta>-ki# ša# ardāti (?) ([RN117: 302]). The SB parallel suggests reading the Ur tablet as *{giš#*GU#.[Z]A ša#}, which seems compatible with George’s copy ([RN117: pl. 22]), as well as with the digital photograph (@url{http://www.ur-online.org/subject/55645/}).”

In my view the first sign; must be A or ZA; perhaps read a-kal? Cf. Pettinato’s rendering of this and the following line: ‘colui che penetra la (tua) vulva possa prendere la sifilide, la sifilide che alberga nella tua vulva possa essere il suo dono’, but this remains highly speculative. As for the word that follows, while I read the adjective in MB Ur as šu-uh-hu-u₂ (so also A. Westenholz’s copy, against Lambert’s ša-ah-hu-u₂; Gadd also saw ša), one cannot discount the possibility that there existed a parras*-stem adjective šaḫḫû, so here and in the following line there is no need take refuge in the rare value ŠAH = šuh₂. - Note: [RN117: 849–850]: “There are two alternative ways of dealing with ana in this line and its repetition l. 198). Either it is a mistake for ina and introduces a locative phrase or it marks the indirect object of appalsamma. Elsewhere in SB Gilgameš naplusu takes a direct object (SB I 14 itaplas samētašu, V 2 ittanaplasū mīlāšu, V 3 ittanaplasū nērebšu, IX 141 etc. ana palāsa arkassu, XI 93, ūmu ana itaplusi, XI 139 appalis kibrāti), but the construction with ana or dative pronouns is amply documented elsewhere (see AHw, p. 814, s.v. N 2). A third solution, to translate ‘I who entered the House of Dust’, assumes an unusual word order and produces a clause that in l. 198 has no logical connection with what precedes or follows.”

Note also, utilizing the same root, the phrase tar-si-it kimāḫi, ‘funerary preparations’, in a NA inscription describing the burial of an Assyrian king ([RN199: 57, 12]; cf. [macginnis1987neo-assyrian: 2, i 14′]). Our passage may have Enkidu contemplating his own funerary goods – or rather lack of them, since he has been transported to the Netherworld in a dream. But more likely Ereškigal is still speaking, and follows up her preliminary enquiries as to who brought Enkidu to her realm with a further question: how did he happen to come without the vital gifts of tribute for the gods of the Netherworld?”
