- Note: The suggestion of reading muš-min₃-di instead of the muš-man-ṭi in [RN1419vv: 115] is followed here. The suggested correction muš-mid!-di in [RN2254: 184] (the text having MAN instead of BE as a result of scribal error) would consequently be unnecessary. Still, this does not help in identifying the following noun that has been assumed to be rihiṣti. The collation of KalNA1 confirms that there are traces of two signs before the sequence with TI, AN and IM. This rules out the possibility of having a logographic writing for rihiṣti adad, which in itself would be unusual in an overwhelmingly syllabically written poem.

[RN2709: 536] cites zammāru in this line as evidence for a comparative -um, but a more plausible interpretation is that it is a predicative complement. For predicative complements in Akkadian, see [LS25: 650–653] with the description that they can be translated in English by “an ‘as/for’-phrase or by a circumstantial introduced by ‘being’”. For other instances of predicative complements used in Ludlul, see [fromebllab0003: 81].

In the transliteration by Horowitz & Lambert ([RN2282bb: 243]) the correction e-ma!-ti is suggested. The photo of the tablet does not allow the collation of these signs, but the traces of horizontal wedges before the supposed ša₂ in the copy suggest the possibility that the line may in fact contain the sequence e-ma!-a!-ti.
